Help Orphaned Wildlife Thrive During San Diego Humane Society's Virtual Wildlife Baby Shower!

SAN DIEGO — As wildlife baby season begins, San Diego Humane Society's Project Wildlife program is excited to announce its 15th annual Wildlife Baby Shower. This beloved campaign invites the community to support orphaned and injured baby squirrels, bunnies, raccoons, opossums, hummingbirds, ducklings, bobcats and more by purchasing much-needed items from the organization's online baby registries. To make a difference, visit sdhumane.org/babyshower.

From Amazon to Walmart and Target, community members can choose to donate supplies or contribute directly to San Diego Humane Society. Every item, including pop-up habitats, soft baby blankets and bags of baby bird seed, will help care for the tiniest and most fragile wildlife in need. Donations are shipped directly to San Diego Humane Society, making it simple to show your support.

“The Wildlife Baby Shower makes it possible for us to care for the hundreds of baby animals who rely on us for survival each year,” said Alexis Wohl, DVM, Wildlife Veterinary Manager at San Diego Humane Society. “We couldn't do this lifesaving work without our community. Every donation empowers us to be able to rescue and rehabilitate more than 320 animal species across San Diego County.”

With your help, San Diego Humane Society can continue to protect and care for the incredible wildlife that shares our region. Visit sdhumane.org/babyshower to learn how you can support this special effort and make an impact on the lives of orphaned and injured animals today!
